An Evening Echo.

Life is, in fact, a battle. On this point optimists and pessimists agree. Evil is insistent and strong; beauty enchanting and rare; goodness very apt to be weak; folly very apt to be defiant; wickedness to carry the day; imbeciles to be in great places, people of sense in small, and mankind generally unhappy. But the world as it stands is no illusion, no phantasm, no evil dream of a night; we wake up to it again and again forever. HENRY JAMES.

The Wheeling Register announces that Wall Street favors Hanson for President. Credit the Telegram to announce in this connection that the Democratic state machine of West Virginia and the special interests also favor Hanson.

With the state board of health here this week talking sanitation and other health measures, it is hoped that that body will not overlook the cesspool at the junction of East Pike and Factory streets and take effective measures to have it abated.

The McNamaras, it is evident, were not only cowardly enough to accept money from those who believed in their innocence, but also to attempt to use that money, or a part of it at least, to bribe jurors. And, yet the cry had gone up from coast to coast that the men could not have a fair trial and would not get justice. Evidently, when they resorted to the bribing business, they did not want justice.

The confessions of the McNamaras should bring the lesson that it is well to wait and hear the evidence in such cases, before coming to a conclusion as to whether accused men are innocent or guilty. In their cases doubtless their confessions are better for society than if they had stood trial and had been convicted and hanged, as there would have been hundreds of thousands of people unwilling to believe that they had had a fair trial, and with these their guilt would not have been established. The McNamaras themselves tore the wool from many eyes and the latter suddenly fell on the very hideousness of the crimes and cowardice of the two men. As averting further bloodshed and allaying a class hatred movement, their confessions may be sufficient, but the punishment promised to be meted out to them is insufficient as to them. They deserve to be hanged.

Senator Clarence W. Watson has joined the Clarksburg Board of Trade, taking ten memberships of $25 each for three years, making a total of $750 to be contributed by him to the effort to push Clarksburg. Senator Watson is closely associated with some of Clarksburg's leading business men in local enterprises and business institutions. These enterprises and business institutions, managed in a highly successful manner, have brought Senator Watson good returns, and he recognizes from a business point of view that there is no better or safer place for investment than Clarksburg. He appreciates the fact that Clarksburg has been well managed and that his financial interests here are among his best. His business associates here appreciate his identification with the board of trade and are glad to state that from past and present close business relations with him his act in joining the local board of trade will prove of much benefit to that organization.

Controlling the Exponent.

With an affected seriousness causing laughter, the Exponent announces that it is controlled by its stockholders. The Telegram ventures the assertion that the declaration made some of its stockholders wonder where they come in. As a matter of fact everyone knows that the Exponent is controlled by the Democratic state machine and bosses. So complete is that control that it is perfectly safe to state that the methods employed in taking a straw vote to ascertain where the rank and file of the Democratic party in this section stand on certain party questions will not be repeated. Newspaper coupon votes will not again be issued by the bale and not in the newspaper as so strongly intimated by the Fairmont Times several months ago in connection with a straw vote the Exponent professed to be conducting.

Many interesting revelations might be brought out in connection with the question as to who controls the Exponent, but suffice it to say of the bare declaration that its stockholders control it, that with the majority of the stockholders controlled, the actual control is not necessarily mentioned when the declaration is made that the stockholders control it. One little question squarely answered is not amiss. The question is, who controls the stockholders?

"The Black Arrow" is the name of an interesting Kinetogram at the Bijou theater today.

Sir Daniel Brackley attempts to force his ward, Joanna, to marry Lord Shoreby, but receiving news of an impending battle, is obliged to hurry to the front. To prevent Joanna's escaping him, he takes her with him disguised as a boy. Young Dick Shelton (Sir Daniel's nephew) brings reinforcements to Sir Daniel and thinking Joanna a boy assists her to escape. Joanna and Dick reach home, closely followed by Sir Daniel who, becoming suspicious of Dick, plans to have him killed. The plan is overheard by Joanna, who warns Dick of his danger. In the excitement Dick discovers that his supposed boy friend is none other than Joanna, a childhood playmate. They renew their former friendship, which now develops into mutual love, but are rudely interrupted by the approach of Sir Daniel's hired assassins. Dick escapes and hastens to the woods, where he joins the "Black Arrows," a band of outlaws deadly enemies of Sir Daniel. Choosing Will Lawless, one of their number, as companion, they start out to rescue Joanna, disguised as Monks. Dick and Lawless, through the help of Joanna's companion, manage to enter the palace unnoticed and for a brief moment Dick and Joanna are clasped in loving embrace, only to lose each other when she is led to the hall for the marriage with Lord Shoreby. But Lawless saves the day by piercing Lord Shoreby with a black arrow, as the ceremony is about to begin.

Dick escapes and manages to save the Duke of Gloucester from an attack of Sir Daniel's soldiers. Gloucester thanks Dick warmly and by Dick's advice attacks Shoreby town. Dick is given charge of the main position and manages to hold it against the terrific attacks of the Lancaster army. For this gallant conduct Dick is knighted.

Dick and Lawless learn that Sir Daniel and his household have fled and thus escaped the terrible carnage. The soon overtake them and make short work of his remaining soldiers. Sir Daniel begs Dick's forgiveness, which he readily grants, but when his back is turned Sir Daniel attempts to kill him, only to be pierced by the last black arrow let fly by Will Lawless.
